

New Yorkers For A Day

They Make "Jackass" Brandy in California Now, and Grape Growers, Getting More Money for Their Products Than They Ever Did Before, Are "Resigned" to Volsteadism.

Two years ago no walls of anguish and prohibition were louder and more distressing than the mournful outcry raised in California, where the making of wines and liquors was a leading industry. But there's a cheery smile to-day for every wall of yesterday, for the vineyards are flourishing—bigger and better than ever—according to Eugene C. Batten of San Francisco.

The grape growers are getting about $120 a ton for their crop, said Mr. Batten at the Majestic yesterday, "and they cannot supply the market, although that price is more than double what they could get two years ago. The Raisin Growers' Association turned back to its members $120,000,000 for the crop of 1920, a 50 per cent. increase over the return for 1919. Natually these agricultural interests in the State are quite "resigned" to the new order of things under the Volstead act.

"Enforcement of Prohibition is entirely in the hands of Federal agents, the State and municipal authorities taking no part in support of it. A wine-press was part of the equipment of nearly every farmhouse before Prohibition and, judging by the freedom with which the 'dago red' still flows, none of them has gathered any cobwebs. One of our latest Prohibition drinks, made in twenty-four hours, with peach parings as a base, is called 'Jackass brandy.' It's a conservative drink, in the sense that a little of it goes a very long, long way."

CENTRAL AUSTRALIA IN THE RING.

"Central Australia is difficult of access, and very dry, but there are great possibilities in that territory," according to Alberto Longoni, a Swiss who has lived there for many years, now at the Astor.

"There are still many persons who doubt the future of Australia," he went on, "for the region has been described many times. The experiences of explorers, scientists, overlanders, telegraph men, clergy and miners have all been told in language which described the country from the various viewpoints."

"The first explorer saw it as a region to be crossed with difficulty before he could reach the far-off goal—the shores of the Indian Ocean. The prospector, though he never doubted the mineral wealth of the country, was forced to admit that the out-of-the-way places were peculiar and made mining more costly. Science solved many mysteries but left many unsolved."

"We have all the raw products and can obtain all the capital and labor necessary. Australia is going to be the richest and most powerful nation in the world."

HE CAN FEEL NEW YORK'S SPELL.

"I am as much interested as any one could be in the sights of New York," declared A. Tangwanki, a wealthy Chinese merchant, totally blind, who is making a world tour with his sons and daughters and is at the Claridge. "I do not have to see all your wonders, for my physician and the young members of my party are my eyes. I like New York and think I understand it."

DIVORCE EASY IN FRANCE.

"Nice, France, is the easiest spot in the whole world to get a divorce," according to L. B. C. Delaney, an American officer, who is at the Waldorf. "I have seen the most precise justice done there—not law, perhaps, but Solomon-like justice. France would throw out such a case as the Stillman divorce suit."

"If a woman deserts a man, the husband goes before a department and a clerk writes a letter asking the wife whether she intends to return or not, the letter being officially sealed."

The wife answers through the bureau. Neither party, however, can remarry within 300 days."

HOLLAND'S ANNE MORGAN HERE.

Miss Hendrika van der Elter, who is known as "the Anne Morgan of Holland," is now at the McAlpin. She is a daughter of the Court Chaplain of Holland, who performed the marriage ceremony for the present Queen Wilhelmina, and she has for years been interested in welfare work in her country.

Miss van der Elter is just completing a trip around the world, during which she visited many of the Dutch colonies.

"Everywhere," she said yesterday, "the women showed the greatest interests in America and the work of American women in the war. Many times I was taken for an American, in spite of my pronounced Dutch accent."

HERE'S ONE FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE.

"I'll be go-darned," remarked a New Hampshire guest of a New York hotel to the reporter for The Evening World. "It beats me altogether. I saw a cartoon in the funny papers several months ago, which showed a baggage man listening to the contents of a trunk with one of those machines which the doctors use before they will let you pay the premium on your life insurance."

"I thought it was a joke, but it isn't. I've come up from the South, and incidentally I annexed a few quarts of something that looked like the real article. Is it here now? It is not. Now how did it get out of my trunk, which was properly locked? Answer—the spectroscope, or whatever they call it."

"Not only that! My brother went South not so long ago, and took a few suitcases along with him. Did they get there? They did not. Why not? The spectroscope—that's the answer. If I ever take anything with me again, I'll muffle it so that the most adroit baggage man, armed with all the latest weapons of modern science, cannot detect the ripple. But now, what am I going to do?"
